

Bridgewell appoints Leanna Fleming as Chief Financial Officer

Leanna Fleming

At the end of February, Bridgewell announced the appointment of Leanna Fleming as Chief Financial Officer.

Fleming will oversee all aspects of Bridgewell's budget and finance department. She will provide leadership and direction to fiscal operations to shape, support and promote the agency's mission, growth and long-term financial viability. Previously, Fleming served as CFO of a Lawrence-based health and human services agency for over five years.

"Leanna's career spans human services and other nonprofit sectors, and her strategic insights and operational acumen have contributed to the growth and stability of the organizations she has served," said Bridgewell President and CEO Christopher Tuttle. "We are thrilled to welcome Leanna to the team and are confident that her experience will be invaluable as we continue to grow and advance our mission."

FamilyAid receives $90,000 grant from Rockland Trust

On March 11, FamilyAid received a $90,000 grant from Rockland Trust Charitable Foundation to help families throughout Massachusetts find and maintain housing. The grant will enable FamilyAid to provide education and support to nearly 4,500 children and parents.

"We are incredibly grateful to Rockland Trust Charitable Foundation for their continued partnership and this generous grant, which will provide critical resources to sustain and expand our work," said FamilyAid President & CEO Larry Seamans. "This support will ensure families facing homelessness have the stability and opportunities they need to get back on their feet quickly."

Somerville-Cambridge Elder Services awarded $50,000 Safety Net Grant from The Boston Foundation

On March 12, Somerville-Cambridge Elder Services announced it has received a $50,000 Safety Net Grant from The Boston Foundation to support general operations and agency programs.

Funds for this grant come from The Boston Foundation's Permanent Fund, an endowment built to help the Greater Boston community thrive. Each year, The Boston Foundation distributes more than $15 million in discretionary grants and other resources from the fund, which are largely awarded through a competitive process open to nonprofits serving the foundation's catchment area.

YMCA of Greater Boston adds four to its board

The YMCA of Greater Boston (YGB) has announced the appointment of four local leaders to its General Board of Directors: Reverend Willie Bodrick II, Amy Lynch, Doug Smith and Adam Volwiler.

Bodrick is the Senior Pastor of the historic Twelfth Baptist Church in Roxbury and currently serves as the Roxbury Y Advisory Board Chair. Additionally, Bodrick serves as the President and CEO of The American City Coalition (TACC). Lynch is the President of Comcast's Northeast Division and is the senior executive responsible for all operations across 15 states, from Maine through Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Smith is the Executive Managing Director at Citizens Private Bank. He previously served as Senior Managing Director at the company, showcasing his expertise in banking, wealth management, and strategic oversight before accepting his current role in March 2024. Volwiler is the Co-Managing Partner of Chestnut Partners. Since joining Chestnut Partners in 2009, Adam has advised clients on numerous investment banking assignments, including M&A, corporate partnerships,

ST. MARY'S CENTER FOR WOMEN AND CHILDREN

90 Cushing Ave. • DORCHESTER, MA 02125 • 617.436.8600 • STMARYSCENTERMA.ORG

About the Agency

St. Mary's Center for Women and Children (SMC) is a multi-service nonprofit organization serving women, children and families experiencing homelessness and deep poverty in Dorchester and East Boston.

Founded in 1993, SMC began as a program for pregnant and parenting teens but quickly expanded to address the complex issues affecting families experiencing homelessness. Today, SMC provides a series of residential programs complimented by wraparound services across the housing continuum, addressing the root causes of family homelessness and supporting pathways out of poverty for 500 women, children and families experiencing homelessness each year.

Through four key pillars of support, SMC meets families where they are and aims to break down barriers on the road to long-term stability and self-sufficiency.

SMC is proud to partner with government agencies aimed at supporting families experiencing homelessness, including the Department of Children and Families (DCF), the Department of Transitional Assistance (DTA), the Executive Office of Housing and Livable Communities (EOHLC) and the City of Boston Mayor's Office of Housing.

Philanthropic support from corporations, foundations and individual donors fills critical funding gaps not covered through public contracts and enables SMC to provide wraparound supportive services that meet each family's unique needs.

Pillars of support: St. Mary's Center takes a multifaceted approach to homelessness

With the understanding that shelter is not enough to erase the devastation of cyclical poverty and homelessness, SMC's team of highly skilled professionals provide an integrated model of care to address the root causes of family homelessness and meet each family's unique needs through residential programs and wraparound support services. Through four key pillars, SMC provides the supports needed to propel families towards their personal goals and a sustainable future.

STABLE PERMANENT HOUSING

Within SMC's residential programs, women and children are provided with a safe place to live and access to basic necessities. The agency operates two Adult Family Shelter programs in Dorchester and East Boston, supporting 63 families at a time. A Young Parenting Living Program (YPLP) provides comprehensive services for 15 pregnant and parenting young mothers between the ages of 13-22 and their children. When rent-ready, YPLP families can move to SMC's on-site transitional housing program which can accommodate 12 families in apartment-style units. While at SMC and after their exit through 36-month stabilization services, SMC staff assist residents with housing search, navigating housing resources and additional barriers that led to and perpetuate homelessness.

LIFE SKILLS

Through a family-centered approach, SMC provides comprehensive supports that build critical life skills and promote family independence and stability. These life skills fall into four categories: financial stability, parenting skills, personal growth and wellbeing.

BEHAVIORAL HEALTH AND FAMILY MEDICINE

SMC aims to break down barriers on the road to long-term stability for its families.

To support families' mental and emotional wellbeing, SMC provides embedded behavioral health care services across all programs through a full-time clinical team. Members of the clinical department work collaboratively to develop family support plans to improve outcomes on their paths to long-term stability. To support families' physical health needs, SMC also offers comprehensive family healthcare services through on-site partner, Boston Healthcare for the Homeless Program.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT

SMC provides residents with access to education and workforce development programming with the goal of equipping mothers with resources and support to further their educational goals, develop skills and explore career pathways. The agency offers workshops to residents on-site, as well as a scholarship program to provide financial assistance, supporting residents' career and educational journeys.

Executive Leadership

Alexis Steel has served as President of SMC since September 2020, after joining the agency in 2018 as Senior Vice President of Operations and Compliance. A passionate advocate for women and children, she proudly serves on the Steering Committee and now as Treasurer on the Board of the National Women's Shelter Network, a growing network of over 390 shelters nationwide with the shared vision of eradicating homelessness for women and children.

Under Steel's leadership, in 2020 SMC launched a Strategic Plan, guiding the agency's vision to provide an integrated model of care addressing the root causes of family homelessness. Grounded in evidence-based best practice, SMC has a proven model of success in long-term stability for young families building protective factors to increase economic mobility and establish two generations of stable futures. This success has laid the critical foundation for SMC's transformative next step: establishing a comprehensive ecosystem expanding SMC's model into Permanent Supportive Housing.

Throughout her career, Steel has worked with women and children through global health initiatives. Prior to SMC, Steel oversaw global operations for the Consortium for Affordable Medical Technologies. She previously oversaw grants for federal and private foundations for Mass General Brigham.

SALUTING THE CARING FORCE

Over three decades of dedication: Shelby Balukonis

Since 1990, Shelby Balukonis has worked at Partners in Child Development's (PCD) Early Intervention program. Early Intervention provides guidance for parents and caregivers to support the development of infants and toddlers from zero to three years old who are not reaching their expected milestones or are at risk of developmental delays. PCD has been providing these services in the Merrimack Valley for over 45 years and has recently expanded into the Greater Lowell area. Shelby has held a variety of roles including team leader, site manager for their Lawrence office and clinical lead for the social workers. Currently, Shelby is the Intake Lead at the Lawrence office transitioning to the new Lowell office.

"With her extensive years of experience in providing early intervention services to children and families in the Merrimack Valley, I'm thrilled to have Shelby support our expansion into the Greater Lowell area. Her passion for providing culturally responsive care and her deep understanding of diverse communities will continue to help every child reach their full potential and empower families for years to come," says Cheryl Bruk, Division Director for Early Intervention.

"Shelby's commitment and compassion for the children and families she has served are truly unmatched. Her dedication, experience and passion will undoubtedly make a significant impact on the community, and I can't think of a better person to help lead this effort," says Leslie Siciliano, Program Director for PCD

Shelby Balukonis has worked at PCD's Early Intervention program for several decades.

Greater Lowell Area.

Her daily role includes overseeing all referrals coming into the program and managing the larger intake team. She enjoys staying engaged with families receiving services and continuing with direct service work. She is now excited to be bringing her skills to children and families in the Greater Lowell community.

"One of the reasons that I love working in Early Intervention is the versatility of the job," says Shelby. "It is always changing based on the children's and families' needs. I consider it a privilege to be able to work with families in their own homes and appreciate the uniqueness of each family."

Jody Dupont: Answering the call to care at Seven Hills

Seven Hills Community Services (SHCS) provides residential options for adults with developmental disabilities, including the Individual Supports option. The quality of staffing is critical to the success of this option and the people supported. An example of this stellar quality beams from direct support professional/case manager, Jody Dupont.

Jody began her career at Seven Hills in August 2019, and her trajectory has been soaring ever since. Not missing a beat from day one, Jody is focused on one goal: "I want my clients to be happy and fulfilled at the end of each day." Jody supports three clients daily, with a priority on fulfilling responsibilities. "When we finish our chores, we reward ourselves with fun!" she says. "Fun" includes entertainment, dining out and visiting family and friends. Jody's spirit never needs rekindling. She has energy to spare and spends it exploring new opportunities for exciting adventures.

Jody consistently exemplifies the Seven Hills core values of respect and kindness, integrity, teamwork, innovation and service to others. She shows unwavering respect for her clients to feel heard, valued and supported. As a colleague, Jody is honest, trustworthy and dependable. Her collaborative spirit is a cornerstone of the program's success. She works seamlessly with her team, sharing insights and fostering a positive workplace. Above all, Jody strives to make a difference in the lives of people with disabilities.

Jody Dupont exemplifies the core values of Seven Hills.

Jennifa Nolan-Jackman, assistant vice president of SHCS, underscores the positive effect Jody has on everyone she encounters. "Jody's kindness and hard work make a real difference every day. She is a true champion and a positive influence for the people she supports and her colleagues!"

On January 16, 2025, Jody received the SHCS 2024 Employee of the Year award at the annual Seven Hills event. It was an honor to shine the spotlight on a staff member who is always answering the call to care with her signature light shining brightly on the abilities of us all.

Past and Present: Reflecting on the first issue of The Provider newspaper

When I was in grade school, I didn't imagine that later in life I'd be working in management at a human services membership association. After my fleeting dreams of being a professional athlete were dashed and the thought of running for President of the United States was quashed, I turned my attention to something a little more obtainable: Going to college to be a newspaper reporter.

So off I went to Boston University's College of Communication where four years later I'd graduate with a bachelor's degree in print journalism. I had been the editor of The Daily Free Press, the student newspaper, and I had a real love for newspapers, writing and the industry overall.

And then life happens. After graduating, I worked as a newspaper reporter for two years at the Record-Journal in Meriden, Conn., but soon moved back to Boston to work on a political campaign. During that time, I answered a questionnaire from the Providers' Council and after the campaign ended, I applied for a part-time communications job with the Council. I guess that took!

As our board and staff work to honor the Council's legacy this year and we invite members to join us in Celebrating 50 Years of Impact, we've been running an ongoing series here in The Provider about the Council's history, which has enabled us to take a few trips down memory lane (with more still to come!) You'll see on the front page this month a story about the origins of the newspaper; I couldn't help myself and really dug into a few of the first copies we have, and it was a fascinating time capsule into names, issues and details that captured the attention of those leaders in this sector nearly 50 years ago.

But even as the names of programs, state departments and those people involved have changed, the issues remain strikingly the same today as they were 50 years ago. And I was proud to see the response from the Providers' Council — which was then the Massachusetts Council of Human Services Providers, Inc. and still 30 years away from using the shortened name! — was just as comprehensive as it is today, still meeting the needs of its members.

The first issues contained updates on the new Executive Office of Human Services contract written by Robert Cowden — someone who would go on to be a longtime Providers' Council attorney and who was with the organization from its very start. Another writer discussed the beginning of the Department of Children and Families — then the Department of Social Services — which began with a law passed on the last day of the Legislature's session in 1978 (sounds familiar!)

In going through the old newspapers — which were more in a newsletter format than the typical newspaper you hold in your hands today — I was struck by how many things the Council made priorities in 1978 that we continue to focus on to this day.

Filling jobs in the human services workforce: The Providers' Council today has our Jobs with Heart board where it's free for members to post their open positions — the website generated nearly 900,000 job exposures in 2024 for members who posted more than 2,000 jobs that year. But even back in 1978, a Council article titled "Filling a vacant position?" offered to help members with their workforce needs. "Resumes are accepted from job seekers and held on file for six months. Any agency trying to fill a vacant position is welcome to review our resume file. ... We are also interested in receiving notices of vacant positions from you so that they would be available to the job seeker."

Convenings: Since it's very beginning, the Council has been bringing members together — perhaps in no greater numbers than at our Annual Convention & Expo, where up to 1,200 friends of the sector have attended at the Marriott Copley Place Hotel in recent years. Those first newspapers were no different and discussed holding a "1979 Convention" that the board of directors was planning. "Since the days of its incorporation, the Council has sought improvements in the Massachusetts system for purchasing community-based care by a way of a collaborative effort with state agencies," it read. "Save the date ... to discuss a possible convention and call Gerry Wright at the Council office now for more details." Gerry, of course, still calls members annually to this day encouraging them to come and bring their staff to the Annual Convention & Expo.

Advocating with members at public hearings: Yet another page in one of those first newspapers notifies members about the time, date and location of a public hearing to review new regulations promulgated by the Executive Office of Administration and Finance — something striking similar to how the Providers' Council today helps our members prepare for Chapter 257 hearings at the Executive Office of Health and Human Services. Just last year alone, the Council attended more than a dozen hearings, helping members advocate for rate increases for programs and better wages for direct care workers, nurses, clinicians and others.

We were amazed to see the earliest copies of The Provider preserved nearly 50 years later, and as you read this, we're pleased to note that we'll be adding them to our website for all to download — making these original copies of what would become our flagship newspaper available online for the first time. We hope you'll take a quick look at some of the earliest news we captured from our human services sector, comparing it to ways we're still serving membership today. On behalf of all of us at the Providers' Council, we look forward to accompanying you as we continue on through the next 50 years of our shared history.

EDITOR NOTE: The Council is appreciative to our longtime cartoonist Michael Ripple, who drew his last cartoon for us in 2021. We'll share some of Michael's "greatest hits" this year, as well as highlighting artwork from members' program participants.

Empowering individuals with iPads, enhancing independence

By Sophia Macrina

Tempus Unlimited has collaborated with Easterseals to distribute iPads aimed at enhancing independence for individuals within our Adult Foster Care and Supported Living Programs. Easterseals, like Tempus Unlimited, is dedicated to providing programs and services to people with disabilities. Their mission is to ensure that children and adults living with disabilities have equal opportunities to live, learn, work and play. Our shared commitment to empowering individuals with the tools, resources and support they need to thrive has allowed this partnership to be a significant success.

After receiving funding from MassAbility, Easterseals actively sought out agencies to partner with. With the help of Louise Colbourne, Director of Assistive Technology, Tempus Unlimited effectively referred 39 individuals for telehealth devices, helping to bridge the gap to essential healthcare services with access to vital technology.

Members of the Adult Foster Care Program as well as consumers in the Supported Living Program can use these devices to set up appointments, conduct research and easily access needed information in their health portal. This factor offers an immense amount of support to someone who may face challenges traveling due to mobility issues or health conditions and needs to get in contact with a doctor or caregiver in a timely manner. These telehealth devices offer a convenient way to stay connected, eliminating the need for in-person appointments and supporting the maintenance of a consistent routine, an essential factor for those who require frequent attention.

One family member in our Adult Foster Care Program shared, “Our iPad allows Donte to access his telehealth appointments and keeps all of his information organized in one place. He is able to communicate with people and stay entertained by listening to his favorite music. It makes life easier.”

Another member, Stephen, also highlighted the importance of the iPads, adding “The iPads are a huge help with medical appointments, therapies, coping mechanisms, etc. Thank you very much to Easterseals for the program and Tempus for helping with information and distribution.” Both Donte’s and Stephen’s experiences help illustrate how these devices create a cohesive and well-coordinated environment at home.

Not only do the iPads simplify daily tasks but also enhance members’ and consumers’ independence. Through discussion with Louise, she shed light on the success of the iPads within Easterseals, with one individual named Betty reporting, “I am bed-bound most of the time, which makes it very difficult to get to appointments, I have to rely on other people to get to my home, get me out of bed and get me rides to appointments, it takes up a whole day. Now I can easily meet with my doctors on this iPad on my own terms without having to check with anyone else. This has given me great freedom.” In times of isolation, having a tool to feel connected to the world is incredibly important. Though these are small devices, they have made a big impact on an individual’s quality of life.

This technology has proven to be a powerful and transformative resource for those who rely on it. By providing iPads to those in need, this collaboration has not only enhanced the daily lives of recipients but also empowered them to gain more independence. These devices have opened new doors to health-related communication, education and social connection, allowing them to engage in previously difficult ways. The shared interest and dedication to providing equal opportunities and resources to children and adults living with disabilities makes achieving this goal of independence much more special. Tempus Unlimited is exceedingly grateful for this partnership with Easterseals and continues to provide community-based programs enhancing independence while positively impacting the lives of those we serve.

Taking the opportunity to educate your community on developmental disabilities

By Kathleen Pruett

As we observe Developmental Disability Awareness Month each March, it is prudent to reflect on the significance of increasing understanding and acceptance of individuals with developmental disabilities. Developmental Disability Awareness Month is more than just a time for awareness; it is an opportunity to educate, advocate and promote inclusivity within our communities.

Developmental disabilities affect millions of individuals and their families, yet stigma and misunderstanding persist, even today. Raising awareness isn’t just important, it’s imperative. Developmental disabilities can affect physical, learning, language and behavior skills. This broad spectrum includes, but is not limited to, autism spectrum disorders, Down syndrome, cerebral palsy and intellectual disabilities. Each of these can pose unique challenges and opportunities, not only for the individual, but also for their families, educators and the community, and it is our collective responsibility to ensure that individuals with developmental disabilities are not sidelined but instead fully included in all aspects of society.

The significance of Developmental Disability Awareness Month is rooted in its ability to foster understanding. Education is the key to eliminating misconceptions. Many myths surround developmental disabilities, often leading to stereotypes and discrimination, and promoting accurate information can help shift perceptions and continue to change the narrative from one of limitations to one of possibilities.

Developmental Disability Awareness Month serves as a powerful reminder of the valuable advocacy efforts in place today as well as those that still need to be pursued. While tremendous strides have been made in the realms of healthcare access, inclusive education and employment opportunities, the reality is that still to this day too many individuals with developmental disabilities continue to face barriers in their daily lives and that local, national and international awareness campaigns, and community programs are essential to ensuring equity for all.

Advocacy during Developmental Disability Awareness Month calls upon each of us to continue to engage, educate, support and empower individuals with developmental disabilities. In addition to advocacy, this month provides a space where individuals, families and providers can unify and connect with ongoing advocacy efforts. Developmental Disability Awareness Month amplifies the voices of individuals, families and providers by providing a platform to share experiences, challenges and triumphs. When we unite, we foster a sense of community that is vital for support and resources.

Engaging in local events, whether by taking part in workshops, awareness walks or community outreach programs, strengthens our collective efforts to highlight the importance of inclusion for individuals with developmental disabilities. Continual encouragement for businesses, schools and organizations to engage by educating their employees, fostering inclusive environments and promoting policies that support diversity is vital. It creates the opportunity for meaningful impact and encourages others to genuinely see the value of inclusive practices, thus changing workplace and educational cultures for the better as a whole.

In this ever-evolving society, it’s important to recognize that each and every one of us has a role in creating an inclusive community. Educators must adapt their teaching methods and frameworks to ensure all students can succeed, while businesses can embrace diverse hiring practices that include those with disabilities. Humanity’s strength lies in its diversity and recognizing and celebrating this diversity leads to innovative solutions and prosperous experiences for everyone.

As we embrace Developmental Disability Awareness Month, we make and ask this pledge — not just to raise awareness for 31 days, but to incorporate these values into our daily lives. We must work toward a societal norm where individuals with developmental disabilities are not viewed through a lens of limitation or disability, but through one of ability and potential.

Developmental Disability Awareness Month is a vital observance to promoting understanding, advocacy and community. We all benefit when every member of society has the opportunity to participate fully and meaningfully. As we continue to transform awareness into action, and appreciation into advocacy, ensuring that individuals with developmental disabilities can thrive, contribute and be respected members of our communities, may we all take this opportunity to engage, educate ourselves and others, and work toward a future where inclusivity is not only encouraged but honored, celebrated and ingrained in our daily lives.

Kathleen Pruett is the Director of Development at Opportunity Works, Inc.

Developmental Disability Awareness Month is a chance for systematic change

By Abigail Parrilla

As the CEO of The Price Center in Newton, Massachusetts, I can’t stress enough the importance of Developmental Disability Awareness Month. Serving individuals with intellectual and developmental disabilities (IDD), including autism. Empowering, encouraging and caring for individuals with special gifts, needs and abilities for almost 50 years, The Price Center is a life-changing service agency that offers a range of extraordinary programs. The Price Center’s programs serve many people across a range of abilities and reflect our commitment to maximize each individual’s self-confidence and self-advocacy along with their physical, emotional and intellectual capabilities. I see firsthand the value of fostering an inclusive and supportive community.

This month is an opportunity to celebrate the strengths and contributions of those we serve while raising awareness about the challenges they face. Developmental Disability Awareness Month is not just a calendar event, it’s a catalyst for systemic change. For nonprofit leaders in the IDD and autism space, this month provides a strategic opportunity to elevate advocacy, deepen community engagement and transform internal practices. In Massachusetts, a state known for its progressive stance on disability rights, this is the moment to lead by example and drive meaningful impact.

For nonprofit CEOs in Massachusetts’ IDD and autism community, Developmental Disability Awareness Month is a springboard for lasting change. It offers an opportunity to affirm your organization’s commitment to inclusivity, empower those you serve and drive advocacy efforts that resonate well beyond a single month.

The American Community Survey (ACS) sheds light on disability demographics in Massachusetts and underscores the need for ongoing disability awareness initiatives. Recent ACS estimates indicate that roughly 13% of Massachusetts residents report having a disability. This figure reflects a substantial portion of the state’s population and emphasizes why disability awareness remains a critical area of focus. Among older adults (65+), the prevalence is notably higher, often exceeding 35%. This trend highlights the intersection between aging and disability, underlining the need for tailored services and public policies that address the needs of seniors. In contrast, younger age groups show lower prevalence rates, although early identification of developmental disabilities (such as autism) remains a key priority. Data consistently show that employment rates for individuals with disabilities are significantly lower than those without. In Massachusetts, competitive employment figures for working-age adults with disabilities typically range between 20–30%, which points to persistent barriers in the workforce and the importance of robust inclusion strategies.

IMPLICATIONS FOR DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITY AWARENESS AND ADVOCACY

We can all help create a more inclusive society by promoting understanding, advocating for equal opportunities and fostering environments where individuals of all abilities are welcomed and valued. Whether through education, inclusive hiring practices or simply listening to and amplifying the voices of those with disabilities, each of us plays a role in building a more equitable future.

At The Price Center, embracing Developmental Disability Awareness Month as a way of life means integrating the principles of inclusion, respect and advocacy into every facet of the organization. This approach is more than dedicating one month to awareness, it’s about weaving these values into daily practices and long-term strategies.

Here’s how this philosophy can be reflected in action:

1. Everyday inclusivity

Accessible environments: Ensure all facilities, digital platforms and events are designed with accessibility in mind.

Hundreds demand livable wages, loan repayment at TCF Rally

SWM budget includes $173M for Ch. 257

The human services sector will almost certainly receive millions of additional state dollars next year following the early-May release of the Senate Ways & Means Committee's FY 24 budget proposal, a $55.8 billion spending plan.

Just like the budget proposals from Gov. Maureen Healey's and the House Ways & Means Committee, the Senate proposal investing $173 million in the Chapter 257 Revenue Line item (1599.4900), representing an increase of $94 million, or nearly 119%, from FY 23. The Council composed the Chapter 257 line item to the FY 23 budget, rather than the FY 22 budget, because the number of Chapter 257 cases reviewed by EOC&B attorneys is proportionally higher every other year.

State all funded the Chapter 257 Revenue at $173 million. This investment will support increasing the critically low wages for community-based human services workers," said President Council President and CEO Michael Wadsworth. "As our sector's living crisis continues to worsen, pay increases to attract more workers are most important than ever."

The SWM budget proposal included higher funding amounts than the SWM budget proposed for two Departments of Children & Families line items. There was a 36.35% increase to DCF Family Resource Centers and an 8.47% increase to DCF and DFA Related Child Care. However, the SWM proposal decreased funding in several other line items compared to the

A commentary from a legislator on human services

Growing our human service workforce and addressing inequities requires real investment

By Sen. Sal DiDomenico

Human service professionals are the face of our society's safety net for families and individuals in need throughout Massachusetts. We all have had to lean on this workforce or know someone in our lives who has relied on human service workers. Whether someone is having a difficult time getting their child all the resources they need, dealing with a substance abuse disorder, seeking mental health care, struggling in school or needing housing assistance, human service workers are always there for us.

As an elected official and member of state government, I believe it is our responsibility to support human service professionals and ensure they are respected for their critical work. I am proud to sponsor S.119, An Act establishing a loan repayment program for human services workers, which aims to take a huge step forward in lifting up these professionals and their families. This legislation would provide eligible human service professionals for up to $6,000 to repay their qualified education loans if they have an associate degree, up to $20,000 if they have a bachelor's degree and up to $30,000 if they have a master's degree.

I have heard from many constituents working in this industry who were required to attain some level of higher education or training and are now struggling to pay back the loans they needed to pay for that schooling. As jobs across this sector are setting higher education requirements for job applicants, public and private universities throughout our state and the country are raising these costs year after year. It is hypocritical and self-defeating if we thank human service workers for their service in one breath and then refuse to ease their financial burden in the next.

Working professionals in this field are not paid enough for the work they do, especially given the high cost of living in our state. This reality makes it difficult for nonprofit organizations and government agencies looking to fill positions and retain employees for long periods of time. Workers who aren't making enough money and are saddled with debt are forced to make impossible financial decisions and can then suffer from food insecurity, unstable housing situations, lack of access to adequate health care and so much more.

These challenges have contributed to a growing workforce shortage, and a weakening safety net, highlighting a growing equity issue. A University of Massachusetts study found that human services employment has dropped significantly in recent years which has led to a workforce crisis in this sector and a lack of public service availability for residents of the Commonwealth. The report also detailed that women and people of color are heavily represented in this workforce — especially in the lowest paid positions — and more than one in six human service workers are low income.

By passing this bill, we could greatly benefit workers (particularly women and people of color), organizations looking to hire and our society at large. I will continue fighting for this legislation until it is signed into law so that Massachusetts can grow its human services workforce and become a leader in addressing our longstanding workforce inequities.

PROVIDER: Council’s newspaper opens the path to communication with members

50 Years of Impact

ments in the human services industry. Each issue covers news on public policy and educational programs in the human services sector alongside expert commentaries from industry leaders. Readers will also find a thought-provoking column from a legislator or elected official, in-depth profiles of members and employees, and the latest personnel announcements and agency news.

In 1978, the Council began sending bulletins to its members to keep them informed about public policy and organizational changes. Recognizing the need for a more comprehensive communication tool, the Council decided to launch a newsletter “to disseminate timely information concerning community-based human services issues,” as stated in a memo to members on September 15, 1978. The first issue of The Provider was published on October 15, 1978.

The inaugural issue of The Provider was six pages and featured an interview with Secretary Gordon Chase, the EOHS Secretary at the time. It also included a review of a subcommittee hearing on children’s welfare and a calendar of upcoming events within the sector. In addition to written content, The Provider also showcased cartoons from the Providers’ Council’s longtime director of operations and cartoonist Michael Ripple, who drew political cartoons for the newspaper. The newspaper began to feature Ripple’s cartoons in 1984 even before his career as a Council staff person began. In 1996, Ripple joined the Council, where he continued to draw cartoons for the paper until his retirement in 2021.

While the design and the contents of The Provider have changed over the years, the mission of the paper has remained the same.

“The success of this newsletter is dependent upon how well it meets your needs,” Susan von Magnus, administrative assistant and first coordinator for The Provider, wrote in her letter to members in 1978. The strength of the paper, like the Council it represents, thrives on the dedication and determination of its members.

As the Council enters the next chapter in its history, The Provider will continue to be a trusted source of information for its members. For more information on The Provider newspaper, please contact Maureen Lynch, editor of The Provider, at mlynch@providers.org.

who dedicate themselves to supporting thousands of individuals across the Commonwealth. Eligible workers, who must be employed full-time and have worked in the field for at least 12 consecutive months, could receive up to $6,000 for an associate degree, $20,000 for a bachelor’s degree and $30,000 for a master’s degree to assist with repaying their student loans.

Bills have been assigned bill numbers and assigned to the Joint Committee on Children, Families and Persons with Disabilities for their initial hearing and consideration. The joint committee is chaired by Sen. Robyn Kennedy and Rep. Jay Livingstone.

These legislative efforts are crucial in addressing the workforce crisis in the human services sector, improving financial stability for workers and ensuring the sustainability of essential services for residents across Massachusetts.

To strengthen support for these critical bills, The Caring Force Rally will return to the State House on Thursday, May 8, uniting human services workers, individuals served and advocates from across Massachusetts. They will rally for livable wages and student loan relief, emphasizing the urgent need for these legislative initiatives.

PRICE CENTER: Advocate for developmental disability awareness

Inclusive communication: Use respectful language and person-centered narratives that acknowledge and celebrate diverse abilities.

2. Continuous education and empowerment

Staff training: Offer ongoing professional development on disability rights, best practices and inclusive strategies.

Community learning: Organize regular workshops, panels or guest speaker sessions featuring voices from the disability community.

3. Celebrating achievements and stories

Highlighting success: Share success stories of individuals with disabilities, emphasizing how their contributions enrich the community.

Cultural celebrations: Mark key dates and events beyond the traditional month to continually honor disability pride and achievements.

4. Advocacy and community engagement

Policy influence: Use the platform to advocate for policies and practices that support equity and accessibility on a broader scale.

Collaborative partnerships: Work with local organizations, community leaders and self-advocates to build networks that drive meaningful change.

5. Reflective and evolving practices

Feedback loops: Regularly solicit feedback from community members and staff to ensure practices remain relevant and effective.

Adapting and growing: Stay committed to reviewing and evolving internal policies and outreach initiatives in light of new insights and community needs.

By making disability awareness a year-round commitment, The Price Center not only enhances the quality of its services but also sets a powerful example for other organizations. This holistic approach builds a more inclusive society where every individual’s dignity and potential are recognized and celebrated!

I challenge everyone — every day — to join me in creating a more inclusive society. What will you do with this challenge?

Here are a few ways to start:

Educate yourself and others — Learn about the experiences of people with disabilities and share that knowledge to break down misconceptions.

Advocate for accessibility and inclusion — Support policies and practices that ensure equal opportunities for all.

Engage with and support disability organizations — Volunteer, donate or partner with organizations like The Price Center to make a direct impact.

Practice inclusion in daily life — Create spaces where everyone feels welcomed —whether at work, in your community or in social settings.

Together, we can make a difference — one action at a time.

Abigail Parrilla is the President and CEO of The Price Center
